I am enclosing herewith copy of a letter which I received today from Frost. It is self-explanatory, I believe.

I do not know whether Frost has discussed the points which he mentions in the last paragraph of his letter with you. In any case I believe it is advisable for us to eliminate items from our publications distributed in England which the BBC eliminate from their documents owing to risk of action. Please coordinate this with BBC and conform to their practices for publications distributed in England. As far as I can see at the moment this need not influence any of your product except that which is mimeographed and distributed locally.

I have referred this matter to the Office of Operations and the General Counsel and will advise the BBC in the very near future as to what channels we propose to use to pursue this problem further.

Sincerely,

L. K. White
